CUTS: Fans will miss sexy shots of Myleene

Plug pulled on Ant & Dec's live footage

EXCLUSIVE by PETER DYKE

JUNGLE reality show I'm a Celebrity had fans raging last night after taking the axe to live coverage.

ITV1 bosses will now mainly screen this year's contestants - including Myleene Klass, 28 - in edited highlights.

Viewers will be fed money-raking ITV Play phone-based game shows instead.

MIGRANTS FLOOD IN AT 1,500 A DAY

Foreigners pour in as Brits flee country

by JAMES WICKHAM

FIGURES have revealed that 565,000 immigrants arrived in Britain last year – more than 1,500 every day.

At the same time, 380,000 people abandoned the UK to set up new lives in countries like Australia, France and Spain.

The overall population rocketed by 185,000 – 500 a day – because of immigrants from places like India, Poland, Pakistan, Bangladesh and Sri Lanka.

The 2005 figures, drawn up by the Office for National Statistics, were slated as being the tip of the iceberg.

Critics said they didn't include any illegal immigrants or take account of foreigners who stayed on after promising to leave.

And there was controversy over the claim only 64,000 people had come from eastern Europe – hundreds of thousands fewer than previous Government admissions.

Bulk

Sir Andrew Green, chairman of Migrationwatch, said: "These figures confirm we are facing the largest wave of immigration in our history."

"The level of immigration is now four times that of 1997 and if these figures are right, the bulk of immigration is not from eastern Europe which accounts for just over one in five."

Immigration Minister Liam Byrne said: "We believe that migrant workers make a vital contribution to the UK."

Of the Brits who left for overseas, the top destination was Australia, where a fifth were heading, followed by Spain and France. Oonagh Baerveldt, from the Australian Visa Bureau, said: "The number of UK migrants to the country has doubled from even six years ago."

No end to jails chaos

THE Immigration Service's handling of foreign prisoners is still as shocking as ever, seven months after the Home Office fiasco first broke.

There are still "systemic failures" between the service and the prisons, despite Home Secretary Charles Clarke losing his job over the scandal.

And chief inspector of prisons Anne Owers warned the system cannot cope with the huge backlog of cases. It is a hammer blow to John Reid, who promised to sort out the shambles that had cost Clarke his job.

A scathing report by Ms Owers yesterday described "chronic failure" and "widespread ignorance".

LibDem MP Nick Clegg said: "This fail-

'I back terror'

A BRITISH Muslim admitted yesterday that he was willing to carry out a terror strike on the UK.

Jawad Akbar, 23, is standing trial at the Old Bailey accused of plotting to build a fertiliser bomb.

Under cross-examination yesterday Akbar admitted he had been considering leaving to become a Jihad fighter in Pakistan, but said that if he had stayed in Britain he would have been prepared to take part in an attack.

The prosecution claim Akbar was working alongside Omar Khyam, Anthony Garcia, Waheed Mahmood, Shuaibuddin Mahmood, Nabeel Hussain and Salahud-

Army shortfall

BRITAIN'S armed forces have been operating below strength for the past five years.

Spending watchdog The National Audit Office yesterday said they had a shortfall of 5,170.

At the same time they were maintaining commitments in Iraq, Afghanistan and the Balkans. But Defence Minister Derek Twigg denied the services were "overstretched".

Meanwhile recruitment was hit by controversies over the Iraq war.

And bullying at the Deepcut barracks made parents reluctant to let teenagers join up.

BUNGLE IN THE JUNGLE!

Fans face TV blackout

EXCLUSIVE
by PETER DYKE

I'M A CELEBRITY fans are about to be hit with a shock jungle blackout.

ITV bosses have slashed their round-the-clock live coverage of what the stars get up to in the Aussie outback.

Now in the new series – which features former Hear'Say babe Mylene Klass, 28 – viewers will get just ONE hour of live feed from Oz instead of 10.

And to fill the vacant hours, they are broadcasting a host of their money-making ITV Play phone-based game shows.

Jungle fan Michael Rosen, 31, from Richmond, fumed: "It's ridiculous that they've cut the live feed."

"We won't see the celebs at their best and worst."

"We'll just see what ITV choose to show us when they edit the clips down for the main show."

Action

For the past four years, fans have had plenty to watch on top of the show fronted by Ant, 30, and Dec, 31. Bosses cottoned onto the fact fans loved tuning in through the night to see the live action as it happened rather than waiting for the highlights.

However, when the new series begins on Monday November 13, ITV will cut their live footage and follow it with the game shows.

Last night a show spokeswoman said: "As the audience watching TV in the early hours is very small we have decided not to run as much live streaming."

Mylene is tipped to be joined in the camp by funnygirl Faith Brown, 58; fashion designer Scott Henshall, 29; ex-Emmerdale actress Malandra Burrows, 40; model Paula Hamilton, 48; Cherie Blair's half-sister Lauren Booth, 39; former Corrie actor Chris Quinten, 49; ex-BBC news reader Jan Leeming, 64, and former Busted singer Matt Willis, 23.

A source said: "We've got the most diverse mix ever. There will be fireworks."

The Knight Rider star – who has found fame again recently with surprise hit single Jump in my Car, says if Pammy wasn't married he'd certainly have a shot.

He said: "I never fancied Pamela – until recently. I was sitting next to her at a party at the Playboy Mansion and there was loads of chemistry."

"I thought how funny it would be if we hooked up now."

"But she's married... sadly!"

DON'T MISS GO FOR IT IN TOMORROW'S SENSATIONAL

Life for child killer father

by REG ROBERTS

A DAD who smothered his young daughter in revenge for his wife's affair with a married judge began a life sentence for murder last night.

Gavin Hall, 33, drugged three-year-old Amelia – known as Millie – with anti-depressants and then smothered her with a chloroform-soaked rag.

Six weeks earlier he had found sexually explicit e-mails between his wife Joanne and her lover, a married solicitor and part-time judge known only as "James".

Millie died just two days before her fourth birthday.

Horror

Her mother found her lying next to the family's two dead cats under a duvet on the floor in what the trial judge described as a "scene of horror" designed to punish.

Hospital radiographer Hall was ordered to serve a minimum of 15 years after a jury at Northampton Crown Court rejected his plea that he was suffering a mental breakdown at the time.

Judge Charles Wide QC told him Millie's murder was a planned and pre-meditated attack after Hall discovered the "extraordinarily explicit" e-mails.

After killing Millie, Hall went on to make an unsuccessful attempt to kill himself in the living room of the family home in Irchester, Northants.

BURGLARIES are 50% more likely on cold cloudy days. Dutch researchers also believe violent crime goes up when it is sunny.

The experts examined police files to match 50,000 crimes with weather records on the days.

A spag bols-up

JAMIE Oliver failed in his first attempt to cook up romance in the kitchen – when his grub went all over his date.

The chef was 14 when he first tried to woo a girl with his cooking.

But his dinner was a recipe for disaster. Jamie, 31, said: "The first romantic meal I ever made was spaghetti bolognese."

"I ate it with this bird called Debbie. But by the time we had sucked up all the pasta there was meat sauce all over her face and top and on the kitchen floor."

"I was only about 14 and she wasn't even interested in a snog."

SOCCER rat Ian Walker will be hit with a £2.5million marriage pay-off after his fling with a Las Vegas showgirl.

Former topless model Suzi Walker, 33, is divorcing the ex Spurs and England goalie over his summer affair with stunning American dancer Sam Thurman, 34.

Pals say Suzi will demand their £2m mansion plus £500,000. Walker, 35, reserve keeper at Bolton, met Sam during a six-week summer break to the US with mates.

Suzi said yesterday: "I thought we had the perfect marriage. That's why it's all come as such a shock to me."

The couple have an eight-year-old daughter Sophie.

Ted gaffe costs her Miss GB

by IAIN BURCHELL
MISS Great Britain Danielle Lloyd has been sensationally stripped of her title.

The shock move came after she admitted secretly dating football star Teddy Sheringham BEFORE he helped crown her the winner.

The beauty queen, 22, scored an amazing own goal by revealing she was already seeing Sheringham when he was a judge on the contest last February.

She claimed she scored with the West Ham ace after catching his eye on her big night.

But in an interview she boasted Sheringham bought her a pair of £7,000 Jimmy Choo shoes last Christmas – two months before the final.

Angry pageant organisers wrote to Danielle yesterday to tell her – in a letter leaked to the Daily Star – that her reign is over.

Sheringham, 40, was one of two judges who gave her maximum marks as she beat 48 other gorgeous girls.

In the letter Robert de Keyser, chairman of Miss Great Britain Ltd, fumes: "In an interview, you claim to have received a Christmas Gift (December 2005), in bed, of a pair of luxury shoes, from Teddy Sheringham."

"Given that you have maintained that your relationship with Mr Sheringham began the night of the Miss Great Britain Final (25th February 2006), this article presents the Miss Great Britain company with a grave problem."

Suspicion

Mr de Keyser adds "you have brought the Miss Great Britain pageant into disrepute" and tells her "we are removing the title of Miss Great Britain from you, effective of today's date".

Last night Mr de Keyser added: "Like Caesar's wife, the judging of Miss Great Britain must be above suspicion."

"Even though the judging may have been scrupulously fair, this revelation is bound to raise questions."

Danielle gushed about Sheringham's present in an interview with Eve magazine.

She said: "I was over the moon when I pulled these gorgeous sparkly stilettos out of a soft cream bag with the words Jimmy Choo written in bronze lettering – when I saw Jimmy's signature on the soles, I was gobsmacked."

Sheringham made his attraction to Danielle clear during the beauty contest at the exclusive Grosvenor Hotel.

He cheekily asked her what football team she supports and, after she replied Liverpool, he grinned: "You've got my vote. Yeah, you definitely have my vote."

Guests at an after-show party at London's Pangaea nightclub told how the pair were soon locked in steamy clinches.

Danielle said they only started dating two weeks later after meeting at a London club.

Her pals also insisted she was single at the time she was crowned Miss Great Britain.

Last night Danielle's official spokesman added: "The real reason she was stripped of the title is because she has just done a nude photoshoot for a top magazine."

"She was offered an exorbitant amount of money and just couldn't say no."

"Miss Great Britain is just not allowed to pose nude. It's as simple as that."

Thorny crowns

■ DANIELLE Lloyd is just the latest in a long line of beauty queens to be stripped of their crowns.

Helen Morgan, from south Wales, famously became Miss World in 1974 – only for her reign to last just four days.

She was stripped of the title after it was revealed that she was an unmarried mother – which was seen as a scandal in those days.

■ Vanessa Williams, the first black Miss America, lost her title in 1984 after allegations that she had starred in hardcore lesbian porn. And in 1999, Rosa Elvira Cartegena was crowned Miss Peru – then quickly banned after it was discovered that she had lied about winning a modelling contest to qualify for the competition.

■ The Miss France crown was taken off the head of Laetitia Blegier in May last year – after she bared all for a glamour mag.

And a month later Heitiare Tribondeau – Miss Tahiti of 2003 – had her name wiped from the record books after she posed naked for a French magazine.

£1,000

VIDEO game fans are busy searching the global black market for a PlayStation3 this Christmas – because it's not out in Britain until next year.

Back-of-a-lorry prices have hit £1,000 for the PS3, which boasts the very latest graphics for games plus a Blu-ray high-definition DVD player.

The most eagerly-awaited games console of all time will be launched in Japan a week tomorrow.

But it won't be in UK shops until March.

Tempted

Sony has delayed the European launch of the sleek £425 machine, blaming language problems and the technical differences in the EU market.

Yet should you be tempted to buy a US or Japanese version of the 60-gigabyte console you may be blowing far more than a grand in cash.

"The US and Japan use a different voltage supply so you will need a step-down transformer to stop the machine from exploding," said Sony spokesman Jonathan Fargher.

■ by PHIL BOUCHER

"Plus it won't play European Blu-ray movies, any European DVD, or any PS1 and PS2 games."

"Ultimately the machines won't be covered by any warranty either as we have no way of repairing them. "So while we empathise with people's desire to have a PS3 for Christmas, you should really wait until March."

Sony reckons six million PS3 consoles will be shipped around the world by the end of March 2007.

REVIEW

PS... I love you

I WAS lucky to play the only console in the UK and can tell you that its graphics and game play are out of this world.

Top is MotorStorm, a mad desert rally into a metal-mangling, glass-shattering dustbowl in a dune buggy, dirt bike or super-up 4x4. But the outstanding PS3 feature is the new motion sensors hidden in the handset. It takes a bit of skill but once mastered, they make normal flight games look as space-aged as Pac-Man. And the wireless control allows you to turn the console on or off without moving from your bed or your beer can.

Star

Brits rush for the exit

FIGURES released yesterday show that 1,500 immigrants a day are coming to Britain to live.

And that doesn't include illegal immigrants, or many of those flocking here from the new EU states in Eastern Europe.

So the REAL number is more likely to be at least double the Government's official count.

Pressure group Migrationwatch says: "We are facing the largest wave of immigration in our history."

Tony Blair has allowed this to happen despite huge public concern.

The influx is creating ethnic ghettos, causing social conflict and putting strain on housing and other services like the NHS.

Meanwhile, many Brits are reacting to the way their country is changing – by getting out!

The migration figures also show that 1,000 Brits a day are leaving to start a new life abroad.

Australia is the top destination, followed by Spain and France.

Tony Blair – soon to stand down as Prime Minister – has hoped to leave behind "a lasting legacy".

The way things are going, his big achievement will be sending a whole nation into exile.

Family is off-target

THE family of Jean Charles de Menezes are up in arms.

One of the police marksmen involved in the shooting of the innocent Brazilian has now shot dead an armed robber.

A spokeswoman for the de Menezes clan says they are shocked that he's been given "a licence to kill again".

The slaying of de Menezes in mistake for a suicide bomber was a dreadful error.

But the officers who did it – in the genuine belief that they were dealing with a terrorist – were cleared of any blame.

As for the armed robber, he had opened fire and deserved what he got.

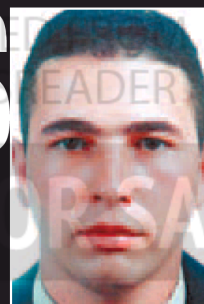

We fully support this un-named police marksman and salute his bravery.

GUN COP: IT WAS KILL OR BE KILLED

VICTIM: De Menezes

Stockwell officer in new storm

THE cop who killed Jean Charles de Menezes was just "doing his job" when he shot dead a second man.

The officer opened fire on a 42-year-old armed robber in Kent on Tuesday night.

The family of Brazilian de Menezes, who was killed when police mistook him for a terror suspect, reacted furiously.

But the officer's superiors have stood by their man.

A senior Scotland Yard source said: "He is a firearms officer and he is doing his job."

"After he was cleared of blame in the de Menezes shooting he returned to normal duties. This is his job."

The officer fired three shots at the man after his gang had stolen £150,000 from a security van outside the Nationwide Building Society in New Romney.

The gang is thought to have raided numerous banks across the south-east.

Maverick

Police were fired on first, the gang blasting them with a shotgun as officers lay in wait following a tip-off.

One source said it was a "kill or be killed" situation for Scotland Yard's CO19 armed response unit.

The unnamed officer who shot back has now been taken off active duties while an Independent Police Complaints Commission probe is carried out. But he has not been suspended.

The family of de Menezes - who was killed at Stockwell Tube station in July last year - attacked the decision to allow the officer back on the streets.

Mr de Menezes' cousin Alex Pereira said: "Family members were horrified to learn that the same officers have been given a licence to kill again even before the investigative process into Jean's death is complete."

But last night the cop's colleagues reacted furiously to the criticism.

One said: "We are not talking about a trigger happy, maverick Dirty Harry type. He was professional and had no alternative but to act as he did.

■ by TOM SAVAGE

"Otherwise, he or colleagues or a passing member of the public could have been killed."

Hero

"We know he has to undergo another rigorous investigation, but we are confident he will emerge as a hero for what he did."

Damian Hockney of the Met Police Authority admitted the involvement of the man who was at the Stockwell incident raised "awkward questions".

But he added: "Armed officers volunteer to protect us in the most difficult situations and I am concerned that this latest situation could lead to a further reluctance on the part of officers to carry guns."

Detectives said last night that three men were arrested at the scene and are being questioned.

LOSER FERGIE IS BOSS-EYED

SIR Alex Ferguson's attempt to blame Bruce Springsteen for his team's shock Champions League defeat has been hailed as one of the "greatest sporting excuses of all time".

I'm smarter than the average Blair!

YOUNG Brits think Wayne Rooney is smarter than Tony Blair.

The England ace beat the PM in a poll to find out who youngsters reckon are the cleverest people.

Brainbox Albert Einstein topped the chart with 42% of votes.

Legend

The Queen, 80, was in second place with 19%, followed by TV wildlife legend Sir David Attenborough, 80, with 14%.

But he only narrowly beat 21-year-old Rooney, who scored 13% - with Mr Blair rated by just one-in-10 of the youngsters quizzed.

The children were also asked to name the cleverest person they actually know - and mums came out top with 41%, well ahead of dads with 26%, and teachers on 17%.

The study found more than a third of kids think that eating healthily will make them as clever as their heroes.

The survey, which questioned youngsters aged seven to 14, was carried out by Heinz to launch its new Mini Meals.

pad in Hove, Sussex, which she used to share with Sir Paul, 64.

Ben parked his car at the far end of the drive, where it remained all night. At 6.45am yesterday he and Heather headed off to the local railway station.

An onlooker said: "They could have been mistaken for a couple. They looked very comfortable together."

"They were standing so close that their noses were almost touching and stared deeply into each other's eyes."

Super-fit Ben, who has dumped his long-term lover Joanne Bradford, 23, has been a shoulder to cry on for Heather during her split with Sir Paul.

A source close to Sir Paul said last night: "He has accepted there is nothing going on between Heather and Ben - but these photographs could well change his mind."

'An act of contempt'

BODY language expert Nadine Field says Heather Mills is "rubbing salt in Paul's wounds" by getting close to Ben Amigoni. The top consultant psychologist, who specialises in celebrity at psychologyonline.co.uk said: "This is intimate body language. "Given her situation it is an act of contempt - whether there is anything going on or not."

RETURN: Neil Shepherd

Hol hell couple home

■ by JERRY LAWTON
GAS tragedy dad Neil Shepherd flew back to Britain from his Corfu holiday nightmare yesterday and was rushed straight to hospital.

The 38-year-old car part company boss and his teacher girlfriend Ruth Beatson, 27, were knocked out when carbon monoxide from a faulty heater leaked into their hotel bungalow as they slept.

They recovered after emergency treatment.

But Neil's children Christianne, seven, and Robert, six, perished.

Inquest

Yesterday Neil and Ruth were led to a waiting ambulance at Gatwick Airport after flying back to Britain from Athens.

They were driven 225 miles accompanied by a police car to Pinderfields Hospital near their home in Horbury, near Wakefield, West Yorks.

An inquest into the children's deaths is expected to be opened by Wakefield Coroner David Hinchliffe today so the bodies can be released for a funeral.

A chambermaid found their lifeless bodies in a bungalow at the four-star Louis Corcyra Beach Hotel in the resort of Gouvia last Thursday.

Greek prosecutors plan to charge the owners and heating maintenance engineers with manslaughter.

STAR BURST
TATTOO artist Mark Stronge has recreated Michelangelo's Sistine Chapel masterpiece on the back of gasman David Caldwell, 26, from Fife.

Gay kiss for bully

A COMPUTER game slammed for its violence sparked a new row last night - for featuring two schoolboys in a gay kiss.

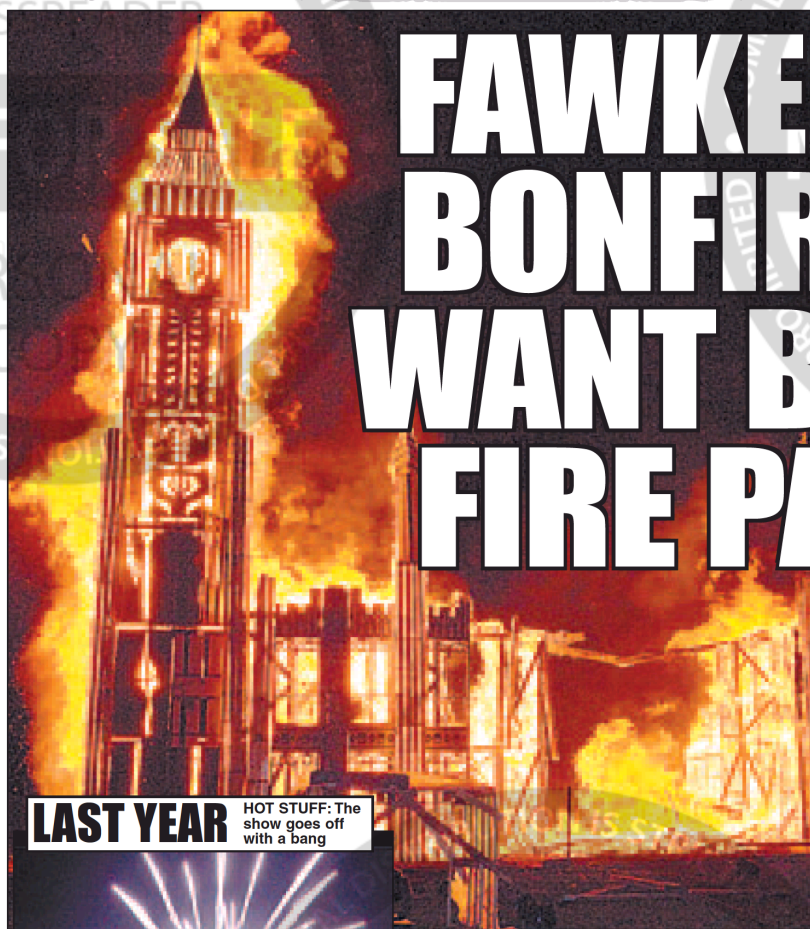

A shock scene in Canis Canem Edit - originally called Bully - sees the 15-year-old lead character give a tall blond lad flowers and tell him: "I'm hot. You're hot. Let's make out."

Bisexual bully Jimmy Hopkins then embraces the boy and kisses him.

The game, released last week, is rated suitable for 15-year-olds.

Laura Shelton, of the British Board of Film Classification, said scenes of schoolboys kissing each other did not affect the games rating.

Fury as crackpots swap Guy for an Indian folk tale

LAST YEAR

HOT STUFF: The show goes off with a bang

FAWKE YOUR BONFIRE, WE WANT BENGAL FIRE PARTY!

GUY Fawkes and bonfires have been banned by a barmy council and replaced with a Bengali folk tale.

The £75,000 fire show will go ahead without the traditional November 5 fun, despite 23,000 revellers flocking to it last year.

Instead they will get an "alternative" story about a Moghul emperor and his tax collectors.

John Midgley, spokesman for the Campaign Against Political Correctness, said: "There is a time and a place for everything and November 5 is for Bonfire Night. This is blatantly ridiculous."

The MP for Tower Hamlets in east London George Galloway said: "It beggars belief that the council should organise a Bonfire night without a bonfire or a Guy."

Proud

And local Tory councillor Tim Archer raged: "Bonfire night is a celebration of our rich and proud history - and it would appear it's being air-brushed out with some sort of attempt to be politically correct."

This year's theme is titled The Emperor and the Tiger. It will tell the story of the Moghul

■ by MARK JEFFERIES

Emperor, the Wise Man and the Guardian of the Jungle.

A mock Bengal Tiger will pace a giant catwalk as fire lights up a "forest" to the sound of Bangla drummers.

Worried Tower Hamlets council bosses have issued a statement saying they are aiming to introduce a different theme each year on November 5.

The statement said: "Our sole aim is to stage an exciting event on the traditional Fireworks Night that will attract the interest of as many people as possible."

"Last year's event, which had a Guy Fawkes theme and involved burning down a pretend Houses of Parliament attracted 23,000 people."

"The dramatic increasing numbers of people attending our traditional event indicates this is a popular approach, as do the many welcoming e-mails we have received, responding to the publicity for this event."

A brief history of Nov 5

IN 2003 angry residents in Fife, East Sussex, used a model caravan and a gypsy family on their bonfire after problems with travellers.

A year later Jodie Marsh, 27, burned a fake Jordan - model Kate Price, 28 - after the rivals began trading insults.

And in 2005 pro-hunt campaigners set fire to effigies of PM Tony Blair and rural affairs minister Alun Michael in protest against the ban on hunting with dogs.

MOVES to ban traditional light bulbs are being looked at by the Government in the battle against climate change. Energy-saving bulbs last up to 12 times as long and can reduce annual electricity bills by around £9.

TWO thirds of Britain's teenagers are considered too fat to join the Army. Only 33 per cent met the body mass index level before the MoD increased it earlier this year to make it easier for youngsters to join.

BECKS: I'M A LAYDEE

DAVID Beckham has been turned into a laydee.

by PETER DYKE

The 31-year-old footie star can be seen here with a blonde wig, big red lips and false eyebrows.

He's been hilariously transformed by Little Britain transvestites Emily and Florence.

Victims

It's a rib-tickling new game called Guess The Celebrity Lady.

The rubbish transvestites, played by Matt Lucas, 32, and David Williams, 35, disguise a number of male stars as women.

And fans have to work out who's who. Other victims include Coldplay's Chris Martin, 29, former James Bond Pierce

Brosnan, 53, funnyman Johnny Vegas, 35, TV game show host Les Dennis, 51, and Big Brother star Dermot O'Leary, 33.

The tranny competition is included in the forthcoming Little Britain: The Game DVD which is being released next week.

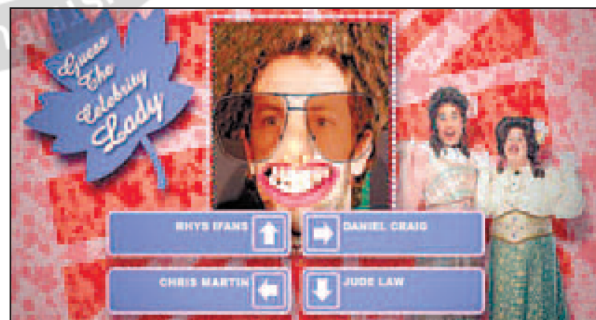

Williams and Lucas have given the blessing for an interactive game based on their other characters.

Fans will be able to play Name that Gay with Dafydd, Marjorie Dawes' Fatfighters Quiz and Guess the Feemtone with Dennis Waterman.

● Little Britain: The Game comes out on Monday priced £19.99.

STABBED: Mr Pryce

Blood link to killing

by LAURA NEIL

A DROP of blood links a teenager to the horrific murder of city lawyer Tom ap Rhys Pryce, a court heard yesterday.

Delano Brown, 18, and pal Donnell Carty, 19, are accused of stabbing Mr ap Rhys Pryce to death.

The Old Bailey heard a drop of the 31-year-old lawyer's blood was found on a trainer believed to belong to Brown.

The shoe was discovered at the house of Carty's uncle, Clive Carty, in a rucksack of clothing.

Laces

Forensic scientist Emily McCann told the jury: "On the upper surface of the shoe there was a small spot of blood belonging to Mr ap Rhys Pryce."

DNA found on the laces of the trainers matched that of Brown.

The shoe was found in a police search of a house in Kilburn, north west London, where the defendants allegedly fled after the killing on January 12 this year.

Brown and Carty both deny murder.

The trial continues.

TRENDY Feng Shui fans can now use the ancient art on the humble garden hideaway - with Feng Shaddy. It will improve relaxation and energy levels, where the shed is used as a workshop, artist's studio or even a love shack.

Brit kids are bad

BRIT youths are some of the worst behaved in Europe.

Our 15-year-olds are drunk more often, involved in more fights and more have had sex compared to the German, French and Italian teenagers.

The research was carried out by the Institute for Public Policy Research.

Its Director Nick Pearce said the figures pointed to an "increasing disconnect" between children and adults.

MILLION-HERS

MOST Brits would sell their partner for £1million - and 20% would pretend to be dying to get the cash, a Channel 4 poll revealed.

CHERYL PHONE STALK TERROR

GIRLS Aloud babe Cheryl Cole has spoken of her hell at the hands of phone stalkers.

The babe has been left terrified after a call centre worker apparently shared her personal details with pals.

And they have begun to bombard her with sexually explicit calls and texts.

Many of the jibes were directed towards her Chelsea star husband Ashley Cole, 25.

Cheryl said: "I've been having a terrible time. It seems some guy who works at a call centre handed my number out and all his friends have been phoning me and sending me texts.

by CAMERON MILLAR

"I've had so many calls during the night and a few times a day.

Nasty

"I have managed to find out the guy's name and I've just told the police. It's an absolute disgrace."

A police source said: "The gang has been giving her a lot of hassle. We are not going to say what the messages were about for operational reasons but let's just say this is not a matter we would take lightly."

A pal said: "She's upset because some of them have been saying really nasty things about Ashley."

It is the second stalker scare this year for the besieged beauty. We revealed in April how the sex siren and her bandmates were being bombarded with a string of sleazy letters.

Security around the girls was stepped up after a former stalker of Mariah Carey, 36, shifted his attentions to the girls and particularly to Cheryl by sending them suggestive poems and notes.

BLOKES WANT TO BE LEAN MACHINES

ULTRA-skinny celebs like Russell Brand are being blamed for a surge in anorexia among young men.

Teenagers are starving themselves to fit into skin-tight jeans like the stick-thin TV presenter.

Brand, 31, was crowned Stylish Man of the Year by men's fashion bible GQ and health chiefs are worried about young lads copying him.

by BILL MARTIN

They are also concerned that fashion mags are making heroes of bony drug users like Pete Doherty, 27.

Official figures reveal that about 10% of patients being treated for eating disorders are male - but experts claim the real figure is more like 25% among under 12s and teenagers.

The Eating Disorders Association says the problem often goes unrecognised in males.

Unhealthy

It claims some boys die because it does not occur to doctors that a male might have a disease associated with girls.

Family Focus chairman Dr Adrian Rogers criticised mags and TV shows which promote unhealthy stars.

He said: "Celebrities who want to look ultra-thin and starve themselves to achieve this set a terrible example.

"Young men who starve themselves look effeminate.

"It's not healthy and it's decidedly not masculine. Only a foolish society thinks it is desirable to look stick thin."

GUEST EDITED BY JACKASS
STARS STEVE-O AND PRESTON

WOW, that's one weird baby scan. Our doing naked somersaults and showing fans at London's Virgin Megastore he's subjected his body parts to his most important parts are still intact. Preston got his kit off too.

WIN
Signed copies of DVD

STEVE-O and Preston have signed five copies of their naughty new flick, National Lampoon's TV: The Movie to give away to readers. The film celebrates the depravity of society or in Preston's words: "We just wanted to break a lot of sh-t, throw Steve-O off a building and get chicks naked." The DVD hasn't been released in the US yet, so get your mitts on it before the Yanks by sending your name and details to thegoss@dailystar.co.uk before midnight tonight. Winners will be chosen at random and will be notified by phone.

They said I was dying so I got off my nut on drugs

STEVE-O was impressed by how clean this pout-fest at the Tinseltown premiere of Bobby. The naughty mister has hooter-hole envy, because La Lohan, 20, has polished her beak so much it's whiter than white. He said: "Mine are gnarly. We did a spoof of Super Size Me in TV: The Movie, but we used cocaine instead of fast food." "We used fake powder on the set, but it was like a Colombian snow factory behind the scenes." "I don't take coke now, because it affects my art." We didn't hear the remainder of the explanation, because it was drowned out by his pal's laughter.

Picture: GILBERT FLORES

JACKASS loon Steve-O prescribed himself some "alternative" drugs, after he was diagnosed with a life-threatening heart condition.

The dashing daredevil, 32, has survived sharks, tigers and grizzly bears so he was horrified when doctors told him he was suffering from cardiomyopathy.

Medics insisted he wouldn't live beyond 40 unless he got immediate treatment, because he had "the heart of a 90-year-old man".

The sexy scallywag popped into Goss Towers to guest-edit the column, and explained: "It was scary, man."

"The dude said I would have a sudden rhythm disorder and keel over, unless I had a heart transplant or electrical defibrillator." But instead of checking into hospital, adrenaline junkie Steve-O flew to his birthplace London to meet a fan who had his face tattooed all over his body.

He said: "I told my girlfriend and she didn't give a sh-t. She heats a mean pizza, but she's a gnarly b-tch."

"So I flew to London to see this guy with pictures of me all over his arms and back. I needed some Pickled Onion Monster Munch to cheer me up, and they only do them over here."

But they weren't enough to raise his spirits, so he flew to Amsterdam to smoke his body weight in hash.

He said: "I went to Stonenager to party with the fan. And then I went straight to Amsterdam and smoked a lot of pot. I didn't drink, because I didn't want to f--- my heart too much."

Turns out he could have given Oliver Reed a run for his money. When he returned to LA, he discovered his ticker was far from dicky.

He said: "I saw this other heart specialist. And apparently my heart's not gnarly. They just screwed up the tests."

And has that taught Steve-O to take it easy? He chuckled: "I'm still celebrating. I'm back on the drink. But I'm still staying away from hard drugs."

He added: "My heart's beating fine now." Judging by our picture, right, it's pumping to all the right places.

Steve-O's bad heart shocker

HAVE YOU GOT SOME JUICY GOSSIP FOR US?

HUSH HUSH

WHICH ludicrously slender celeb once got down and dirty with Steve-O in a hotel room in Los Angeles? And then begged him to tie her up with scarves? The innocent-faced female even told him he was "the one" for her. A shame considering she has a serious problem when it comes to commitment and honesty. Not to mention dangerous mixtures of drugs.

IT seems Steve-O and J.Lo have more in common than the vowel at the end of their nicknames. Apparently, under the red frock horror Miss Lopez wore to New York's Latin Recording Academy Person of the Year, is a derriere very similar to his own. He bragged: "We both have great butts, with the same curves and dips." We're sure we could spot yours though Stevie. We doubt La Lopez, 36, has ever had her buttocks pierced together, or has the choice phrase "Your Name" tattooed on her bum. He said: "She'd look better if she did." The cheeky devil.

QUICKIE..

STEVE-O got Bam Margera, 27, in trouble with Jess Simpson, 26, after they denied cuddles while she was with Nick Lachey, 32. Howard Stern, 52, asked if they'd bumped into each other and Steve-O laughed: "Yeah, he bumped into her."

QUICKIE..

RANDY Steve-O wants to spend one night in Paris... and he's not talking about the city. The frisky funnyman is pals with horny Hilton, 25, but is desperate to get into the heir head's bloomers. He said: "I wanna f--- Paris. Except I think she knows I'll tell everyone when I do." Well, if she didn't know before, she will now.

QUICKIE..

THERE is no love lost between Love Island's Steve-O and ex Hollyoaks actor Lee Otway. The American prankster said he was horrified when the 24-year-old turned up to the UK premiere of the Jackass 2 film in London's Leicester Square. He said: "I asked the doorman to beat him up for me." Mind you, we're sure Steve-O could have taken care of that.

SPOTTED

IN London: Kelly Brook with pals at The Sanderson, Patrick Swayze at Heathrow, Terminal 1. Kate Lawler dancing at SIN, Joss Stone in The Met Bar, James Morrison on Wardour Street and Chico leaving GCap media, Leicester Square after an interview with Leigh for her weekly Capital Disney show.

★ TOM Cruise, 44, and Katie Holmes, 27, looked every inch the happy couple despite Steve-O's jokes about Cruise's lifestyle. The pair, who were off to Maestro's Steakhouse in Beverly Hills, are set to wed in two weeks.

Picture: GOFFIN.COM

Christina's real Dirrty

★ CHRISTINA Aguilera has gone up in Steve-O and Preston's opinions since revealing she went for a wee in a bucket.

It seems the 24-year-old singer, pictured here looking grumpy leaving her hotel in downtown New York, isn't so squeaky clean after all.

The blonde has admitted she once went to the loo in a bucket in front of her crew backstage during a gig. And added she is "comfortable" with her body. "Dirrty" takes on a whole new dimension...
